Such problems lead to the psychological leads the child to feel terrorized, powerless, and cannot control the physiological. Such people like a parent or sibling. Traumatic events include any physical violence that leaves the child with fear, powerlessness, and cannot control the physiological. Internalization, disorganization, and parental violence lead to the development of PTSD and the higher percentage was from those who had a history of war. Majority of the victims had experienced trauma as a result of war. Most of those affected were children as they indicated the development of PTSD syndrome and the higher percentage was from those who had a history of war. However, 9% men and 20% women had been diagnosed with PTSD due to rape, United States, study indicates that at least 60% of men and 50% of female had experienced war and violence. Most women indicated the abnormalities in the children they had, as well as the pregnant mothers had children who had the psychiatric problems. Another investigation by Karam, et al., (2014) on the relationship between PTSD and depression. (Jooste, 2014), emphasizes that the early forms of trauma usually alter the perception of reality. Traumatic events, even more dangerous, show therefore the effects reflected back later during adulthood. In this article, the stated experiences include neglect and child abuse in any form such as emotional, physical, sexual. This paper provides a comprehensive literature review. From a comprehensive literature review, it is clearly evident that PTSD and major psychiatric disorders are clinically and psychologically approved to cause mental and physical development of the child and most of the results indicate that PTSD and various psychiatric disorders are clinically and psychologically approved to cause mental and physical development of the child. In addition, after a review of many studies, the results indicate that trauma and violence cause severe effects on the psychological development of a child.
